Business Continuity Professionals: What do you need to do now?

Course Description

This online session will look in detail at the actions Business Continuity Professionals should be taking now, to prepare their organisations for the landscape and challenges beyond COVID-19. The session is broken down into a number of topics and actions which should be considered by business continuity professionals to prepare themselves and their organisation for the new landscape beyond COVID-19, and the possible changes with their organisation's operating environment.

As business continuity professionals, we often find ourselves and our organisations' reacting to events as and when they happen. By scenario planning, we will be ready to take advantage of the opportunities that arise as a result of the new normal.

The session has been written by and will be presented by business continuity expert and BC Training Director, Charlie Maclean-Bristol FBCI, who has over 23 years of experience in the business continuity industry. Charlie is a former BCI board member and was awarded Industry Personality of the Year 2018 at the BCI European Awards.

The materials and content for this training will be updated prior to the session, in line with the ongoing and changing situation, and any new UK Government advice.

Course Objectives

- Choose appropriate debriefing methodologies for capturing the lessons learned from COVID-19
- Interpret the relevant lessons learned by your organisation from the pandemic and how this could affect business continuity planning in the future
- Design a team who will consider the new normal for your organisation after COVID-19
- Understand some of the potential future issues associated with the role of the business continuity professional

Who Should Attend?

This session is aimed at those involved with their organisation's response to COVID-19 and looking to 'get ahead of the incident', by anticipating future issues and opportunities.

Course Delivery

This training course is delivered as a live online session by Charlie Maclean-Bristol FBCI. There will be an opportunity for attendees to ask questions at the end of the session.
